Documentary film: "Wenn lang die Bilder schon verblassen... KZ Theresienstadt -Propagandafilm und Wirklichkeit"/Længe efter billederne er falmet -KZ-lejren Theresienstadt: Propaganda og virkelighed"[Long after the pictures have faded – Theresienstadt Concentration Camp: Propaganda and reality]. The film deals with the Nazi propaganda film "Der Führer schenkt den Juden eine Stadt [The Führer gives the Jews a city]", produced in the spring of 1944 in Theresienstadt. The film is built up around an interview with the former prisoner Salle Fichermann, who relates his memories of being forced to participate in the production of the film, and includes clips from the propaganda film.

The film originated as a common project of four young German women students, who produced the film together with the film director Thilo Pohle. The original propaganda film was made in the spring of 1944. The Nazis forced the German-Jewish director Kurt Gerron to direct the propaganda film, and other prisoners were made to help in the production, for example, Salle Fischermann was as a boy set to holding the camera cables. He is also in a few scenes as an extra. Salle Fischermann was the only member of the film team who survived imprisonment in Theresienstadt.
